Shared goals of care

Shared goals of care are discussions about what matters to you and your whānau, and what care and treatment you want while you are in hospital.

Tell our health staff what matters to you, because it matters to them.

Our health staff would like to talk with you and your whānau about the goals of care for your admission. This will help you get the care and treatment you want while you are in hospital.

No one knows your body like you do. But it's not just your physical health we would like to hear about – it's also your hopes, worries, values and plans for the future.

About shared goals of care

Most of the time, the care or treatments in hospital go to plan. But unexpected things can and do happen. Sometimes when a person is in hospital, they get worse before they get better. Keeping you involved in your own care and decisions is a big part of getting you better sooner.

If something were to happen and you were not able to tell us what you would like, have you thought about what you and your whānau would want the main goal of your care to be?

- Would you want them to try all treatments that could help get you back as close as possible to your former self?
- Would you want them to get you well enough to go home to give you more time to be with your family and whānau?
- Would you want to let your body decide its own natural pathway?

It is different for everyone, and there are times when what we want is just not possible, but we need to talk about it. That's what shared goals of care are about.

Who will be talking to you?

In most cases, with your permission, your health care team will talk with you. They will ask if you would like members of your whānau or a support person with you during the discussion.

What will they talk to you about?

They will ask you about what is most important to you and your whānau.

This is a chance to talk about:

- your understanding of your medical condition and anything else you would like to know about it
- your priorities if your health did change
- what worries you and what gives you strength
- what abilities are so important to you that you could not imagine life without them
- how much you would be willing to go through for more time.

Who you can include in the discussion

This is a discussion about you – your thoughts and decisions. You can include anyone you want, such as members of your whānau or your health care team.

Or you may prefer to have the discussion on your own. You are free to choose who is involved.

Where the discussion will take place

Let the health care team caring for you will try their best to provide a comfortable and safe space is to have the discussion, please let them know if you are uncomfortable at any time.

Who to contact if you have more questions
